#1 BACKLINKO

Brian Dean's Backlinko publishes newsletters which consists of the most powerful and game-changing content. He has always been my number one guy every time I needed fresh ideas and discover new strategies.

Particularly, his forte is in link-building which I don't go into great depths in my book - hop on to his resources to take the next step and gather sophisticated links!

You can find his blogs here and sign up to his newsletter here!

#2 MOZ

One of the best things about Moz is the fact that all content you see on their website is written directly by industry professionals - everything you see is fresh-out-of-the-oven-example-of-industry-advice-croissants presented nicely before you open the door to the SEOtisserie.

Their Keyword Explorer tool is very popular for research and having their MozBar Chrome extension definitely makes the process easier - it's a paid tool but they have a 30-day trial period which should be enough for you to get your work done!

The spread covered by Moz is fabulous - detailed, exciting and actionable. Have a read on their blog sections which you can find here. To take it a step further, I would also recommend subscribing to their newsletter which you can find here.

NEIL PATEL

Beyond being the co-founder of Crazy Egg, Hello Bar, and KISSmetrics, Neil Patel is one of my favourite SEO bloggers – he is succinct in his explanations, highly creative and keeps you engaged with his very promising proof of concept.

His blogs cover the entire spread of SEO materials – from building a website to identifying automation software, he has something for you no matter at which stage of SEO you are at.

Another cool thing about Neil is that he offers loads of free stuff on his platform. These include SEO tool suits such as the very popular Ubersuggest, webinars and templates!

You can find and use all of his tools here; all of which can be used when you are conducting your research as I have described in my book which you can purchase here!
